

Supreme Court strikes down Biden vaccine mandate, but ruling has limits

Thursday, January 13, 2022

Jim Sullivan spoke with KYW Newsradio about the recent Supreme Court decision to block the vaccine-or-test mandate from President Joe Biden's administration but allow vaccine mandates for most health care workers. He says individual employers can require vaccines for employees, and states and municipalities like Philadelphia can require them, but the court's focus was on the requirement being put on employers by a federal agency. "When you leave work, you leave work, you leave the hardhat there or you leave the fall protection there. Or you leave the respirator there, you don't wear it at home," he said.

To read more of this article, click here.

Related Practice Areas

- Labor & Employment