

Growing number of companies suspend vaccine mandates, including hospitals and Amtrak

Thursday, December 16, 2021

David Barron was quoted in Yahoo! news discussing employers handling vaccine mandates. Sufficient staffing has been hard to maintain in hospitals, which were already contending with a dearth of nurses and other workers before the pandemic. Burnout has further exacerbated shortages. That most likely factored into some health care systems' choices to reverse vaccination mandates, said David. "Most employers do not have the luxury of losing 5 percent or 10 percent or whatever percent of their workforce doesn't want to get vaccinated," he said.

To read more of this article, click here.

Related Practice Areas

- Labor & Employment