

ABA Opinion Defends Anti-Harassment Rule Criticized as Too Broad

Wednesday, July 15, 2020

Thomas Wilkinson was quoted in a Bloomberg Law article discussing how the American Bar Association is defending a model anti-harassment ethics rule that's come under criticism as an overbroad regulation of attorneys' speech. The rule has faced organized opposition from some conservatives religious groups and others who say it "presents an undue restriction on their First Amendment rights," said Thomas.

To read the full article, click here.

Related Practice Areas

- Legal Profession Services