

Virtual Law Offices Create Ethical Concerns

Wednesday, December 27, 2017

Tom Wilkinson, a member of Cozen O'Connor's Commercial Litigation Department, was quoted in the ABA Litigation News article, "Virtual Law Offices Create Ethical Concerns." Lawyers are now practicing in a "virtual law office" (VLO), but doing so triggers certain ethical concerns. Tom believes, "Limiting lawyer-client interaction to electronic messaging may not fully satisfy the lawyer's duty." Tom also expressed concerns that "protecting client confidential information can be more challenging when operating in a VLO environment. The VLO lawyer should not bypass the usual safeguards law firms employ in protecting client files from inadvertent disclosure, including effective password protection and personal device policies."

To read the full article, click here.

Related Practice Areas

- Commercial Litigation
- Professional Liability