

The Invisible Hand of the New York City Budget Director

Ken Fisher authored a column in AmLaw NY analyzing the far-reaching influence of New York City's budget director, Jacques Jiha, Ph.D., and his central role in the Adams administration.

Ken explains how Jiha quietly influences agency-level spending and enforces fiscal discipline behind the scenes, even as the city faces mounting financial uncertainty. The article highlights how a position that receives little public attention has become critical to the daily operations of the nation's largest city.
